BIOGRAPHICAL SUMMARY OF NOMINEE

(About a hundred words outlining career, and what I will bring to the Society)

I am an experienced and innovative leader working at the intersection of climate, culture, community and architecture. Until recently chief executive of NGO Open City and currently an opinion writer on sustainable urbanism at The Guardian, my career spans leading organisations and cultural programmes, publishing, curation, education, youth and community engagement, sculpture and running design competitions. As a non-binary person, my work is marked by a long standing commitment to making architecture and urbanism more open and accessible to younger and more diverse communities.
